What Housing Services Are Available at JBWS?

When a person is leaving an abusive partner, they are often forced into homelessness because their partner may have controlled their finances and intentionally isolated them from friends, family, and community members. These abusive tactics make it challenging for a survivor to leave an abusive relationship because they may not have access to reliable housing, income, or any support system. However, not having a place to stay or the funds necessary to afford housing should not be a reason a survivor remains with their abusive partner. JBWS offers numerous housing services to help victims escape abuse. While involved in JBWS' housing services, participants can receive individual and group counseling, case management, financial and legal resources, financial education, vocational development, and assistance finding permanent housing.

Safe, Temporary Housing:

When a survivor leaves an abusive relationship and is urgently in need of housing, they receive emergency housing. Both single adults and adults with their children are able to receive temporary housing and are connected to the full range of JBWS and community resources.

DV Housing First Program:

A Housing Navigator provides housing advocacy, safety planning, financial literacy, and flexible housing assistance funds to support housing stability for survivors living or working in Morris and Passaic counties.

*Transitional Living:

When the stay in emergency shelter is not long enough to overcome the obstacles of abuse, the Carol G. Simon Transitional Living Resource Center (TLRC) is the next step. Through the Transitional Living Program (TLP), housed within TLRC, adults and their children can live in one of eleven fully furnished apartments for up to two years. While in the Transitional Living Program, clients will be connected to the full range of JBWS and community resources, including life skills development.

Rapid Re-Housing:

JBWS' Rapid Re-Housing (RRH) program assists clients in the housing search process, pays a portion of the rental amount for up to 12 months (clients pay 30% of their income), provides financial assistance for medical, educational, childcare, and transportation needs, and connects clients to the full range of JBWS and community resources.
